THE WALLPAP MINES.

A citizen of Cerbat, Wallapai Mining District, Mohave county, contributes the following to the Express, of Los Angeles, California:

Allow me to premise, after twenty-three years experience on the Pacific coast, that I have never found a chain of mountains as richly endowed with mineral wealth as this district—every day new ledges are struck, and the assays are wonderful. I am astonished that your enterprising men do not send a few experts into this region, as I am fully assured that from your city will eventually come all our supplies.

In a short letter it is impossible to speak of the multitude of rich mines, but I must say that as a big thing, the 13th mine is simply tremendous; it is down twenty-five or thirty feet, and the assays made by Mr. Platz, of more than thirty assays of the ore, averaged over $1,000 per ton; one of the fortunate owners of the mine is L. A. Johnson, who, I believe, has a family in Los Angeles. The same gentleman also owns largely in the New Era mine, the Eva mine, the Titus mine, and Sublim, all of them showing great wealth. Our continual cry is for mills, to work our rich ores; as it is at present we have to pay one hundred dollars for the purpose of working the ore in San Francisco.

A RETURNING emigrant passed through Eufala, Alabama, the other day. We quote from the Times: "He says Texas is now overrun with emigrants, and that the sufferings and wants of many are extreme, and that they would joyfully return to their old homes if they had the means of doing so. Money alone commands sympathy for the Texas emigrant, and however much he may desire to labor for a living, if he cannot get employment, as if the case now in thousands of instances, he is denounced as a fool by the old settlers for emigrating without plenty of money. Indeed, our unfortunate hero had experienced a world of trouble, and he returns heartily sick of Texas emigration. Penniless as he is, he thinks he can do a vast deal better for himself and family at his old place down the river."

It has been known for some years that the human skin can be transplanted or grafted from one person to another, but a recent operation at Bellevue Hospital, New York, is worthy of publication from the extent of surface to be cured. A Mrs. Anna Cooper, from a severe burn lost the skin of her neck and breast, and a new skin would not form. The surgeon took the stump of a freshly amputated leg and grafted 80 pieces of skin therefrom into the breast and neck of the patient. The pieces were of the size of a United States three cent silver piece. Eighty of these pieces adhered, and the woman readily recovered.
